
Bibliography

Hart, Roger, Children's Participation: From Tokenism to Citizenship, 1992, UNICEF International Child Development Centre, Florence.

A clear and well-thought-out essay on the various forms that children's participation can take. Highly applicable to the area of children's rights.

Pike, Graham, and Selby, David, Human Rights: An Activity File, Mary Glasgow Publications.

Though it deals with human rights in general, rather than specifically with children's rights, the book provides excellent examples of interactive teaching strategies for both the primary and secondary level.

UNICEF, Raised Voices, 1993.

This video presents four powerful case studies of individuals and groups of children taking action on rights issues in Brazil, South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States.

UNICEF, The Rights of the World's Children, 1989, New York.

A practical collection of teaching suggestions for the various articles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

UNICEF UK/Save the Children, 1990:

It's Our Right

The Whole Child

Keep Us Safe

Teachers Handbook

This four-volume set provides lively activities and case study material on the Convention on the Rights of the Child; for adults who work with children aged 8-13.

United Nations Centre for Human Rights, Teaching Human Rights, 1989, New York.

A concise guide to issues involved in teaching about human rights, with practical activities.